TOUCHDOWN

“There are some parts of the world that, once visited, get into your heart and won't go. For me, India is such a place. When I first visited, I was stunned by the richness of the land, by its lush beauty and exotic architecture, by its ability to overload the senses with the pure, concentrated intensity of its colors, smells, tastes, and sounds. It was as if all my life I had been seeing the world in black and white and, when brought face-to-face with India, experienced everything re-rendered in brilliant technicolor.”

Day 6 – Delhi + Late Evening Departure

We start our journey with the old part of the town, with the Jama Masjid as the first stop. The Jama Masjid – is the largest mosque in India and has been standing tall for more than 350 years, commissioned by Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan, the builder of the Taj Mahal.

Take a short ride on a cycle rickshaw through the shopping street that runs from the Fatehpuri Mosque to the western edge of the old city, is Delhi's bustling wholesale spice market. Huge sacks of herbs and spices are still brought to the wholesalers on long, narrow barrows pushed by laborers, and there are eye-catching displays of everything from lentils and rice to giant jars of chutneys, pickles, nuts and tea.

We now head to the newer parts of the city, but which still hide historical wonders in its folds. The first stop, Humayun's Tomb, is the first Persian-style garden-tomb to be built in India.

We now move to the area where modern India's seeds were first sown. A drive down the Raj Path (the royal path) takes you to the India Gate, a majestic monument commemorating the contribution of Indian soldiers who laid down their lives for the British Empire's army fighting in World War I.

We go further back into history in our next stop, the Qutub Minar, the tallest free-standing tower in the world. Built in several phases between the 12th and 15th Centuries, the Minar was first commissioned by Qutbuddin Aibak, a Turkic king from north-western India.

Evening in time transfer to Delhi airport to board your onward flight.
